Apples

In Spring apple trees have blossom.
The bees visit the flowers to gather nectar.
They pollinate them.

By the Summer, small apples are starting to form. These grow bigger and bigger until they are ripe.

In Autumn we can pick the apples. They are ready to eat.

Some fall off the trees onto the ground as 'fallers'. Some of them will be fine to eat still.

Then the leaves fall off the tree. Its work is over for another year.

In winter the tree has a rest. It has been working very hard! It might look dead, but it isn't!

After a rest the tree is ready to start all over again when Spring comes back again.

How does the apple tree know what to do?

God made the apple tree.

God made me!
